One and Only

Everyone has stopped looking for him. Except her.

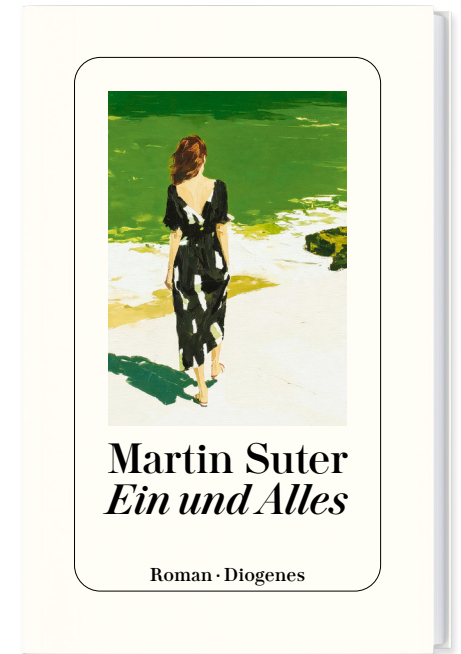

Martin Suter's new novel, an elegant thriller about a love stronger than fate.

A man disappears, and his wife receives mysterious signs — a baffling criminal case, an unusual love story, and the greatest secret of all.

One evening, Sascha doesn't come home. Although Mila is certain her husband can't be far away, the police are soon searching for him, as money is missing from his firm. Has Sascha gone into hiding? Has he been kidnapped? Mila receives signs, comes across traces that can only be Sascha's, even once no one else believes he is still alive. Undeterred, she follows the mysterious clues all the way to the South Pacific.

»Martin Suter's prose is clear and sensitive without ever becoming superficial, and his characters are vivid and multifaceted.«

Nicolas Guth

The Barefoot Girl

»Oi, barefoot girl!«

She glanced over her shoulder. A boy was coming across the wasteground. His name was Marco, or Mario.

»Want me to show you how to tie your laces?« The boy laughed.

Mario. His name was Mario. Though really it made no difference.

He asked if she had a light. She shook her head.

»Can't you go and get one?,« he said. »You live just over there, don't you.«

»You live just over there too,« Lee shot back.

Mario's shack stood some thirty yards down the badly surfaced road. It was the one with the chicken cages in the garden, though no chickens had sat in them for years. Some of the wire baskets were barely visible any more, so high had the weeds grown inside them.

»Can't go there just now,« said Mario.

NICOLAS GUTH, born in 1979, has worked as a waiter and as a driver for a laundry firm and a pharmaceutical company, and today works in marketing for a major car manufacturer. The Barefoot Girl is his first novel. Nicolas Guth lives with his family in the Rhineland-Palatinate.

Nicolas Guth leads us into a world on the fringes of society, and deep into a story that stays with you.

The powerful debut of an extraordinary storytelling talent

For readers of Delia Owens and Elena Fischer.

An allotment garden area in southern Germany, on the edge of a moor. This is where those who can afford nothing better make their home, among them fourteen-year-old Lee and her mother, until the day her mother dies of alcoholism. In the house, Lee finds a bundle of banknotes, enough to get her through for a while. Not even her only friends know what really happened: the perpetually grubby boy next door, Philipp, and seventeen-year-old Nina. Before long the neighbours grow suspicious, asking questions about Lee's mother and the money. Lee finds herself fighting for her very survival, and for the last scrap of family she has left.

Fame and Marriage

She's a star of the film business, yet for her own life there's no script to follow. The dazzling second novel from Julia Engelmann.

Over 50'000 copies sold of Where the Sky Never Ends.

To chase her dream of becoming an actress, Franka gives up her A-levels, parts with the love of her life, and spends ten years fighting her way from Munich to Los Angeles, via Kiel, Salzburg, Berlin and New York. When she wins an Emmy for her first film role, she has finally made it. But what remains of her dream? A flawless body that no longer belongs to her, a fame that rules out any real relationship, and a longing simply to be seen. Franka gathers her strength and dares to break free.

Simon Froehling

Saturday, Sunday

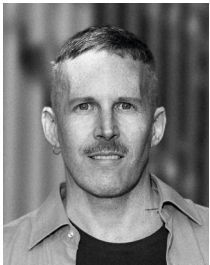

That very first flutter of the eyelids, which knows no time yet and no place, only possibilities, that jolt:

Wake up!

Vin wishes he could linger there.

His alarm, his phone alarm, rings at 3.15am, just the once, and already a forefinger taps it to a stop, already a foot plants itself on the floor, then the other, and he's off to the kitchen, in socked feet, so as not to wake Pia next door, for even in the new flat they sleep apart when he has the early shift, while Lou is next to impossible to rouse, and the children's room, as they still call it though their child is already nineteen, lies at the other end of the corridor in any case.

It had taken almost two weeks for Vin to find his bearings in the unfamiliar bedroom. Until he knew how his head, how his feet lay in relation to the door and the two square windows. Until he no longer struck his shin against the edge of the bedside table, his shoulder against the wardrobe. Until he had learned by heart the number of steps it took to cross the space.

SIMON FROEHLING, born in 1978, is half Swiss, half Australian. After studying at the Institut Littéraire Suisse in Biel, he first made a name for himself as a poet and playwright. His debut novel, A Long Day's Night, appeared in 2010. His second novel, Dürst, was short-listed for the Swiss Book Prize in 2022 and received a commendation from the Canton of Zurich. For his other work he has been honoured with, among others, the Culture Award from Network — Gay Leadership, the Playwriting Prize of the Société Suisse des Auteurs, and a Heinz Weder commendation for poetry. Simon Froehling lives between Zurich and Athens.

Zurich, Pride festival, one exuberant weekend. On which, somehow, the entire weight of our times comes to rest.

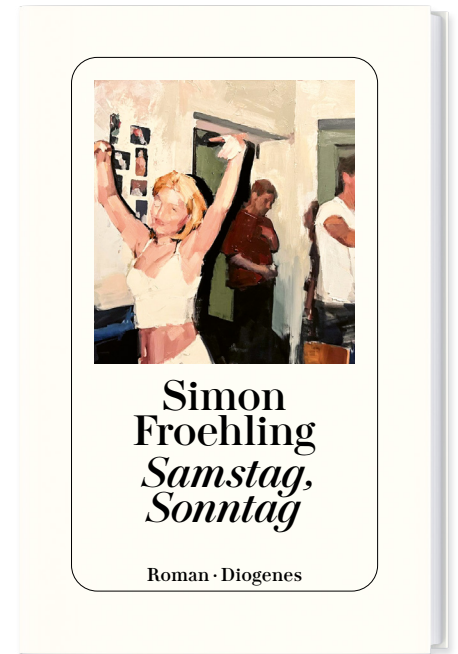

With a precise eye and great empathy, Simon Froehling tells of people who simply want to be themselves, and of what is at stake when their world is shattered.

A book about what it means to be human, with all our prejudices, dreams and fears — a sweeping social novel and any number of love stories, all in one.

It's Saturday, it's summer, it's Pride! One is already primping for the after-party, another still polishing her speech, while someone else is trawling Grindr for company, or lost in memories of past parties and past loves. Vin, Pia, Lou, Marlies, Hanya, Fey, Thorsten, Pantelis, and everyone who knows them. Not one of them suspects that by Sunday nothing will be quite as it was, and everything that once seemed certain will suddenly be called into question.

»Simon Froehling finds strikingly poetic images for a state of defencelessness and vulnerability.«

Chris Kraus

A Sky Full of Whales

A whole family of whales beaches off Rügen, right in the middle of an election campaign. A drama of life and of laughing yourself to death — a topical satire of the present day.

A story of lust for power and deeply felt love, wild, fast-paced and moving

Election season in Germany. A right-wing party is challenging the political establishment. What's needed now are emotional issues, the kind that move people. So it suits everyone rather well when not one but three sperm whales beach themselves on the coast of Rügen. Candidates of every political stripe try to use the story to save democracy, or at least to save themselves. Only Lava Wonder, a trainee marine biologist, genuinely cares about the animals' welfare, so much so that at first she fails to notice her efforts are being ruthlessly exploited.

Four sisters. One house. A thousand memories.

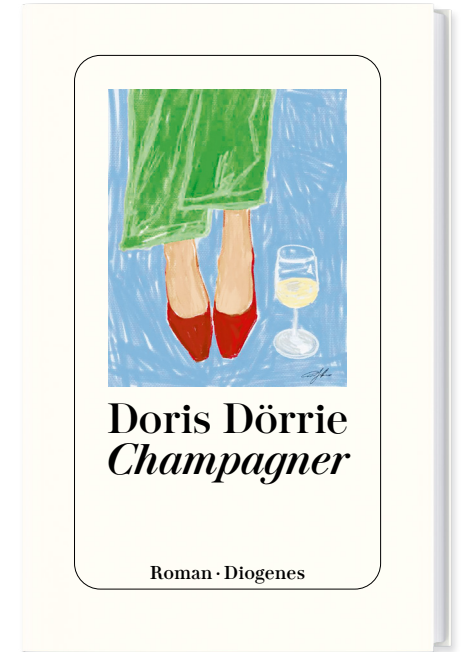

Doris Dörrie tells of happiness that comes and goes, and of what remains.

Over two million copies sold of all of Doris Dörrie's books.

Their mother loved Chekhov above all else, and named them Olga, Masha, Irina and Natasha (after the sisters and sister-in-law of Chekhov's play Three Sisters). Now the sisters gather on Ibiza to decide what should become of the house among the orange trees where their parents lived out their hippie lives to the very end. Should they keep it, memories and all? Or sell it, precisely because of them? Doris Dörrie tells of a happiness as fleeting as champagne bubbles, a tribute, warm and full of humour, to her favourite writer, Anton Chekhov.

The Lost Daughter

A moving father-daughter novel

We remain forever our parents' children, and our children's parents.

The long-awaited new novel from a leading Swiss storyteller — a story of ideals, of lives worn into fixed grooves, and of the freedom to begin again.

One evening the telephone rings. Theo recognises the voice at once: it's Alissa, his daughter, whom he has neither seen nor spoken to in twenty years. Her disappearance, all those years ago, was the great sorrow of both Theo and his late wife's lives. Father and daughter begin a cautious rapprochement, a long conversation. Why did Alissa, who now calls herself Jolanda, leave? Amid sudden intimacy, old wounds and political fault lines, Alissa and Theo try to work out whether, after all this time, they can still have a place in each other's lives.

The Night of Books

Benedict Wells' declaration of love for the magical world of literature. Entertaining and imaginatively illustrated by the renowned artist Carlo Stanga.

Never have books been livelier or more entertaining than at night in the library — a book that enchants readers of every age.

In a mysterious, venerable library in the heart of London, only old Mr Stanley keeps watch each Christmas Eve. As every year, the assembled canon of world literature comes to life at night, falling into dispute over which book should be read aloud. Nothing is more delightful than eavesdropping on the characters and authors in Benedict Wells' story as they gossip and converse.

»If you want to convince a young person that reading is fun, you'd best offer him a book by Benedict Wells.«

NRC Handelsblad, Amsterdam

Bellec / Deweerdt Chéru / Steinmetz / Wells Backroom

They are young. All doors are open to them. Well, sort of...

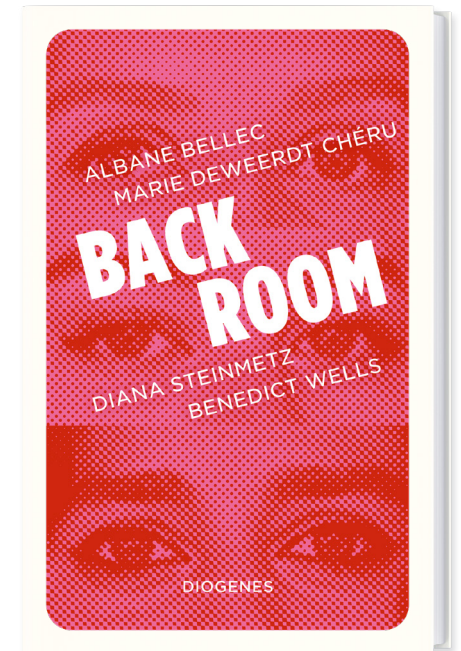

A fascinating collaborative project has resulted in an extraordinary book — a play that reads like a novel.

Created in a rehearsal space and brought to life through listening and writing it all down.

Lara, Agnes and June, three actresses auditioning for the same role. None of them gets the part. And none of them can leave the waiting room once the casting is over. Somehow, impossibly, they're trapped. Disbelieving at first, they live through a night of stories, lies and rage. At first they seem to have almost nothing in common, but once the masks slip, they realise there is something that binds all three of them together.

»It's crazy how we somehow always end up talking about men, even if we don't want to. They keep coming and coming in here. I'm really sick of this. And I'm grieving. Do you know for whom? For the women we could not become.«

Long Live Life

Following her bestseller Perhaps That's How Love Is, Katja Früh proves, in short form, her gift for finding the extraordinary in the everyday.

Witty and full of insight, this is the much-loved column from Das Magazin, the Tages-Anzeiger's weekend supplement.

Why did she give up cooking, and why does it sometimes feel as though dead friends are closer to us than the living? What's the best way to cope with success, and why must one always be happy in spring? In her writing, Katja Früh offers a clever, humorous and occasionally self-deprecating glimpse into her home, her family and her little quirks. Yet almost in passing, she always circles back to the bigger themes: growing old and boredom, fear and joy, politics and hairstyles. All in keeping with the motto: long live life!

an incisive gaze.«

MARTIN SUTER was born in Zurich in 1948. His novels, among them Melody and Love and Fury, and his Business Class stories have also been major successes internationally. So far seven cases have appeared featuring the gentleman crook Allmen. Since 2005 he has written song lyrics for Stephan Eicher. Martin Suter lives with his daughter in Zurich.

STEPHAN EICHER was born in Münchenbuchsee and ranks among the most successful musicians in both Switzerland and France. For decades he and Martin Suter have shared a close friendship, reflected in their regular collaboration. Stephan Eicher lives with his family in French-speaking Switzerland.

Martin Suter / Stephan Eicher Café Pinguin

Martin Suter and Stephan Eicher are at it again, one writing the words, the other singing them.

Stories, lyrics and songs, all in one. An exceptional gift for lovers of literature and music.

In the Café Pinguin, the air smells of fresh coffee, someone is reading the newspaper, and a couple no longer quite young meet, a little awkwardly, for a rendezvous. Nothing much happens here, save for the soft music playing. Some guests love coming here, yet dream of being elsewhere all the same, lying with their love in the tall summer grass, perhaps, gazing up at the blue sky and the clouds drifting past. In these fifteen spellbinding songs and stories, Martin Suter and Stephan Eicher carry us off into a world both melancholy and light-hearted, one that moves and enchants in equal measure.

»An incredibly tender album,
achingly beautiful.«

Friedrich Dürrenmatt The Pledge

»Reality can only ever be partly grasped through logic.«

An absolute classic of crime fiction.

A girl has been murdered. There are almost no clues, and none that anyone takes seriously. A pedlar is arrested and, after a long interrogation, confesses. But Inspector Matthäi, who has since handed the case over, does not believe the real murderer has been caught. And he has pledged to find him.

»An insanely thrilling novel about a delightfully scruffy private eye, about the Philippines as we've never seen them before, and the beauty of the perfect aquamarine monster wave.«

Takis Würger

»A smart hart-boiled surf novel.«

Günter Keil / Playboy, Munich

»Its tone is as brash as the first-person narrator himself, the story composed in a casual rhythm. A sequel is urgently required!«

Hannoversche Allgemeine

»A gritty hard-boiled novel set on sunny beaches – clever, humorous and suspenseful.«

Dresdner Morgenpost

»A wonderfully relaxed crime novel that measures up to its role models: Jörg Fauser initiated Fassbender's novel-writing, Chandler and Hammett inspired it.«

Martin Hungenbach / Aachener Zeitung

DANIEL FASSBENDER was once a sailor, dreams of a career as a professional surfer, and was editor-in-chief at a television news channel. He studied literature, politics and history. In 2018, his debut novel The World's Best Story of Falling was longlisted for the Blogbuster Literary Prize. With Heaven's Gate he received a one-to-one mentorship from the Literaturbüro NRW and the Literaturhaus Bonn, and the novel reached number one on the best crime fiction list DLF. He lives in Cologne.

Daniel Fassbender

Diablo Santo

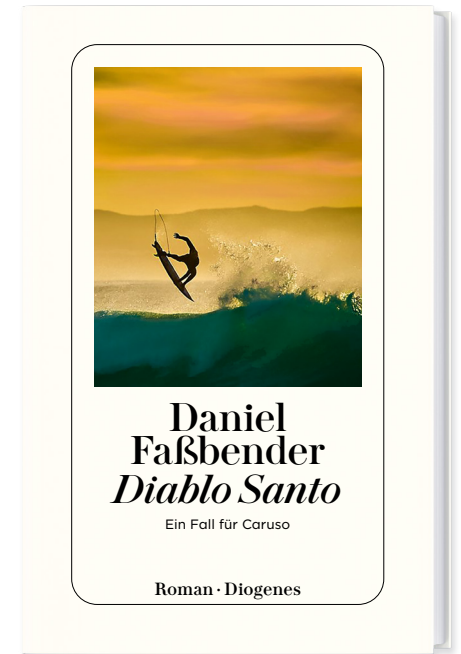

Cerveza, Ceviche and Sicarios — a journey to Mexico's Pacific coast in search of criminals, and the perfect wave.

Debuted at number one on the Deutschlandfunk best crime fiction.

At first glance, you wouldn't take Caruso for a detective, if anything you'd think he was a former professional surfer on the run from his demons. Covid strands him in Mexico, land of the cartels. Money is tight, but the waves at the coastal backwater of Santa Aurea more than make up for it. The village has almost more letters in its name than it has residents, and the quiet suits him just fine. Until the village headman is executed. Every eye turns to the stranger, and Caruso finds himself fighting for his life.

»Surf noir at its best.«

Blue Blood

Red coral, blue blood, and a mysterious death — the eighth case in the internationally bestselling series.

What does a German-Italian queen have to do with an overgrown garden on Capri?

A body turns up on the plot next door to island policeman Enrico Rizzi. Who was the dead man, and what is the meaning of the precious red coral brooch that surfaces shortly afterwards? Together with his colleague Antonia Cirillo, Rizzi follows the trail of a singular piece of jewellery, from Capri's sun-drenched gardens to the narrow alleys of Naples, to the masters of an ancient craft, and to the dark secrets of Italy's former monarchy.

»Luca Ventura skillfully combines tension with Italian flair. Pure pleasure.«

Fraud is the Future

Restitution and the plunder of antiquities.
The heritage of Greece is at stake.

For too long now, the Parthenon's pediments have stood empty, their statues stolen.

What if no one can tell the forgery from the original any longer?

At the Eleusis excavation site, a security guard is found stabbed to death, in what looks at first like a botched theft of antiquities. But when a letter of confession arrives, the case takes a turn. Rather than stealing the statues, the thieves had replaced them with perfect copies, and now they are offering to do the same with the Parthenon frieze. The politicians are delighted, but Ferleki and Charitos will not let the dead guard rest in peace, and the case soon takes on an entirely new dimension.

»Donna Leon's books are a joy.«

The Guardian, London

DONNA LEON, born in 1942 in New Jersey, became world-famous for her Brunetti novels. She lived for many years in Italy and now lives in Switzerland. She is still a frequent visitor to Venice. On these visits, she also calls on her long-standing friend Roberta Pianaro, born in 1948, in earlier years often at her jewellery workshop, but these days more usually at home, where she watches Roberta cook and is treated to delicious meals. The photographs are the work of NICOLETTA FORNARO, born in 1987 in Venice, who knows every corner of her home city and has made a name for herself as a food photographer.

The Brunetti Cookbook

Cooking like the Brunettis. Venetian, simple and good.

100 delicious, authentic recipes, together with 150 vibrant photographs.

With new stories from Donna Leon on the joys of Italian cooking.

Donna Leon's long-standing friend Roberta Pianaro is a passionate cook. In her kitchen above the rooftops of Venice, she cooks with fresh ingredients from the nearby Rialto market. Roberta's simple, flavoursome meals have, since the very first novel, found their way onto the Brunetti family's table. This cookbook brings together 100 recipes of the kind cooked and eaten daily in the Brunetti household.

»The Heidi edition for the next 100 years.«

Der Spiegel, Hamburg

JOHANNA SPYRI was born in 1827 as Johanna Louise Heusser in Hirzel, in the canton of Zurich, the daughter of a physician and a poet. She did not write her first story until the age of forty-four. Nine years later came her world-famous children's book Heidi. None of her other works ever matched its success. Johanna Spyri died in Zurich in 1901.

TOMI UNGERER was born on 28 November 1931 in Strasbourg. He failed his school-leaving exams but made up for it by hitchhiking across Europe, publishing his first drawings in Simplicissimus along the way. In New York his career as illustrator, children's author, draughtsman and painter took off and never looked back. His picture books, among them The Three Robbers and Moon Man, have become modern classics. Tomi Ungerer died in Cork, Ireland, in 2019.

An anniversary edition in a contemporary version for reading aloud, based on the original text.

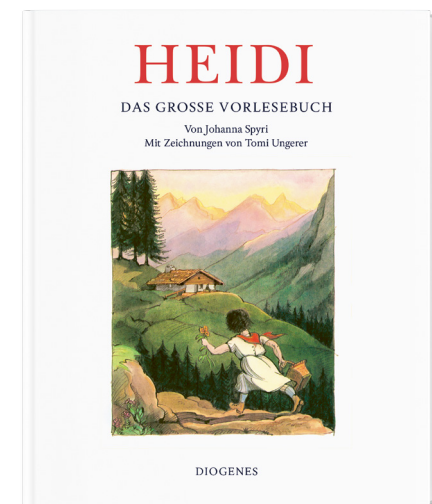

For readers aged 5 and up.

Complete edition featuring both volumes and a selection of Tomi Ungerer's finest illustrations.

Little Heidi is barely four years old when she is brought to live with her reclusive grandfather in the mountains. Yet it isn't long before the innocent child wins the old man's heart. When her aunt Dete takes her away to be a companion to the sickly Clara Stresemann, Heidi herself falls ill with homesickness. Back on the alp, she longs to bring her friend Clara to stay with her and her grandfather, certain it will restore her health. And so it does. The mountain air, wholesome food and Heidi's sunny nature work their own small miracle.

»A touching and colourfully narrated children's classic to (re)discover.«

Diogenes

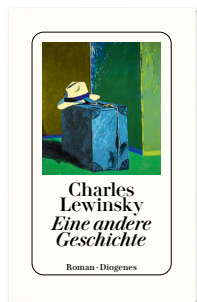

»Atmospheric, enigmatic and deeply immersive, Petuzzi's novel introduces an exciting new voice in contemporary Austrian literature.«

New Books in German,
London

»There are a thousand ways to tell a story. Elena Fischer chooses the dark, challenging, magical one.«

Claudio Armbruster/
ZDF, Mainz

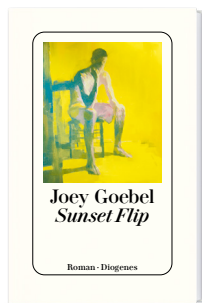

»The cool one-liners alone make this novel worthwhile; it features a single voice: that of Melnitz.«

Susanne Schramm,
Aachener Zeitung

»Old Friends is a wise, accessible and entertaining Zurich novel, about friendship and getting old. Highly recommended!«

Jennifer Khakshouri/
SRF Kultur, Zurich

»In Sunset Flip, Goebel tells a gripping and moving story of the price of survival in a slick yet harsh plastic world built on fake realities.«

Kristina Schmidl/
Südwest Presse, Ulm

»A true, moving story.«

Ulrike Schädlich/
Freundin, Munich

»Highly recommended.«

Denis Scheck/
Tagesspiegel, Berlin

»With this new book, Dobelli proves once again that it can sometimes be more valuable to ask the right questions than to provide answers.«

Welf Grombacher/
Rheinische Post,
Düsseldorf
