Alfred Andersch and Max Frisch met one another for the first time in 1957, in the legendary Café Odeon in Zurich. In his role as a radio editor, Andersch asks Frisch, three years his senior, for the most daring and shocking extract possible from his recently completed novel ›Homo Faber‹. Shortly after that, Frisch writes to him for the first time. At the beginning of the sixties, when Frisch is living in Rome with Ingeborg Bachmann after having left his family, their correspondence intensifies. In 1965, Frisch relocates with his new, younger lover Marianne Oellers, his future wife, to Berzona in Ticino, where the Anderschs' owned a house from 1958 onwards. Frisch finds himself in illustrious company: as well as Alfred Andersch, Golo Mann and the designer and typographer Jan Tschichold live in the small mountain village too. They would go hiking together and meet in food stores for a good chat. But the idyll did not last long, for the tensions between the two pugnacious spirits Frisch and Andersch increased until the latter temporarily broke off all contact.

Alfred Andersch (1914 – 1980) was sent to Dachau concentration camp in 1933. After deserting from the Wehrmacht in 1944, he became an American prisoner of war. After his return to Germany, he worked as a journalist and publicist, and was one of the founders of German radio. Andersch is one of Germany's most important post-war authors, and his books are on school reading lists. Alfred Andersch died in Berzona / Ticino in 1980.
