Gedichte · Diogenes

»So an author has managed to surpass the age of seventy. And now, after publishing novels and short stories, essays and lectures on poetic theory, after compiling commentaries and reports, he has turned his hand to poetry,« writes Hugo Loetscher in his »Introduction to myself. On the treatment of the lyrical.«

The poetic culmination of an author who describes himself in one of his poems as a »cartographer of the void«, whose »bird of love« is a bat and whose roots are »aerial roots«. Poems, searching images, »feelings expressed in proper grammar«, melancholy, playful, trance-like and with a perceptive presence - a lyric commentary on the »commonplace«.

Praise

Once There Was the World

»Marvellous poems.« – Thomas Krüger

Hugo Loetscher

»Hugo Loetscher is a wonderful narrator whose formulation of weighty thoughts is as light as a feather.« – Sonntags Zeitung, Zurich

»Punchlines, quirky humour, startling observations, witty comments – there's never a moment of boredom with Hugo Loetscher.« – Jürg Altwegg / Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Hugo Loetscher (1929 – 2009) was one of Switzerland's most famous writers with novels such as Sewage and The Immune Man. In his role as journalist, he travelled to Latin America, Southeast Asia and the USA regularly. He always held a particular interest in photography. Hugo Loetscher, who lived in Zurich, was a visiting lecturer at universities in Switzerland, the USA, Germany and Portugal; and a member of the Darmstadt Academy for Language and Poetry. In 1992, he was awarded the ›Schiller Prize‹ by Switzerland's Schiller Foundation.
